To the friends of Temperance and the public generally we now make our appeal in behalf of this paper. The publisher feeling it a matter of importance to the interest of the Temperance cause in the District, as well as the general interest of the cause, and having been, as he conceives, Providentially placed in a situation at this time when he can mingle this interest with that of the business men, and thereby render a double service to the community, and still further open a medium of communication by which our principles may be extended far and wide, at a cheap rate, he has purchased a printing establishment, so as not only to be able to put a daily paper regularly to press, but also a weekly; and still further, be able to do any other printing the public may be pleased to have done; and he assures them that they shall have no cause of complaint. He has made arrangements by which he can devote his time to the interest of the office and the paper; and, having employed Mr. Charles W.
Fenton, who will be always on the spot, to conduct the printing, he has no doubt but that general satisfaction will be given. We shall make arrangements to have the earliest news; also the proceedings of Congress.

We wish all who are indebted for the paper up to this time to pay up, as the affairs of the tri-weekly must be closed. They will perceive that we are about to give them a better paper, double the number, at the same price.

While the "COLUMBIAN FOUNTAIN" will be devoted to the cause of Temperance, its columns will be enriched by original articles on subjects calculated to interest, instruct, and benefit its readers. It is intended so to blend variety, amusement, and instruction, as that the various tastes of its patrons may be (as far as it is practicable) gratified.
Commerce, Literature, and Science, and every other subject of interest, not inconsistent with Temperance and morality, will receive the earnest attention of the publisher.
Nothing of a sectarian, political, or personal character will be admitted.

A ROMANCE.—ROGER DUTTON; OR THE TRUE PROPHECY.

(BY G. F. R. JAMES.)
Author of "Darnley," "Richelieu," "The Robber," "Mary of Burgundy," &c.

"You have not sent yet?" said Roger Dutton. "Let me go and stop the messenger."
"Nay, but I have," replied the lady.
Stop him if you can Roger Dutton—there he goes!"

Roger Dutton started to the window, and, sure enough, there he saw a man on horseback riding away from the gates at full speed.

"This is unkind, Mary," he said—"this is most unkind, when I came hither on purpose from Dutton, to spend but three short days with you, to turn it all to bitterness in this manner."

"Nay, it is you that are unkind, Roger," said the lady, who, to say sooth, now that the act was done, was somewhat sorry for her rashness—"tis you that are unkind.
Why did you do this, then?"

"Why did I do it?" said Roger, reproachfully. "Because I am a gentleman and a knight, lady—because I am bound by my knightly oath to aid a woman when I see her injured and oppressed—that's why I did it. Where is the gentleman who would not do the same? I found a poor girl dragged along by two ruffian tipstaves of the Pied-poudre Court; I learned that she was not a dancing girl, but an innocent maiden, upon whom wanton John Glanville had cast his foul eyes; I saw that her lover was a good young soldier, whom I had known in—"

"Her lover?" said the lady, in a changed tone. "Had she a lover with her?"

"Ay, lady," replied Roger Dutton, "a lover as true as your own."

"No great reputation, Roger," replied Mary de Lacy, half laughing, half crying;
"but I knew not she had a lover at all."

"And if she had not," answered Roger Dutton, who was in truth somewhat angry, "I would have done just the same.
Do you think, Mary, that I would see a woman—an innocent, inoffensive woman—dragged on by the arm, through a crowd of people, with pain, and shame, and ignominy, to be delivered up in the end to a wanton judge like that, and then cast in the common prison, to be treated at his will, and not step forward, to defend and protect her?"

Mary cast down her eyes, and Roger Dutton continued. "Do you think that I would see her condemned, against all justice and honesty? Do you think that I would leave her in the power of that wicked man? Do you think I would myself remain insulted and ill-treated—bail refused—my honesty assailed—myself committed to a prison, and not make way for her and myself too with my right hand?"

"God forbid! Roger," cried Mary, frankly, while the tears poured from her eyes.
"I have been wrong, I have been hasty—but you should have told me—that is to say, I did not know all this?"

"That is my own Mary, now," said Roger Dutton, casting his arms round her—"always frank and generous, though somewhat rash and jealous."

"But where is that lover?" said Mary de Lacy, with a little drop of the poison still lingering in the cup.

"He is here in the castle," replied Dutton; "come and see them both, dear girl—you must befriend them. 'Twas but that they were separated by the people of the court, and then hard pressed, that caused me to catch her up and bear her hither.
We had no time for much arrangement, sweet one! But thou art a naughty girl, Mary. What's to be done about this messenger to Rothelan? You have punished me for nothing, Mary."

"I have punished myself too, Roger," said the lady, looking in his face, with her bright blue eyes still fearful. "Margaret," you are a wicked woman to name such a scheme?"

"Lord, lady!" replied the waiting-woman, "tis easily amended. Mother of the angels! 'tis much ado about nothing! Why not send another messenger to-morrow, and say you cannot come?"

"Edith will think me mad," replied her lady, "and my good uncle Ranulph will say there is no end to my caprices. Well, be it so!—it matters not. They shall say what they will, and that shall be my punishment. I will send, and tell Edith the truth, Roger. I will say that it was a fit of rash and needless jealousy. My good father will be pleased to see me humbled; for he said I would repent when I asked him to send the messenger so quickly."

"Well, come, dear Mary," said Roger Dutton—"come! you shall be kind to this poor girl; and you will soon see that she has a lover who need not even fear a Dutton, though we are an all-captivating race, Mary."

He spoke laughing, and took her hand, to lead her down, while she replied, with all her smiles restored, "You are a conceit-ed race, at all events, and we women help to spoil you."

Thus saying, she suffered him to draw her arm through his; and they left the chamber, loitering, perhaps, for a moment on the stairs, to say sweet words, with which the reader shall have nought to do. In the hall below they found the stout Lord Constable, with one or two of his good men-at-arms, talking frankly with the young minstrel Allan and his bride, and listening to all that Roger Dutton had done—now calling him a rash, foolish boy—now swearing that he would crop John Glanville's ears, for offering such indignity to the Steward of Chester.

"Ha! Mary, ha! have you come?" he said, as he saw his daughter enter. "What, how now! Your eyes are red! So the storm passed off in rain, eh, pretty mistress? Here is the fair cause of all the mischief!"

"I grieve to have been such, lady," said the poor girl whom Roger had rescued. "I was sure you would be terrified for this noble lord."

"'Twas not that—'twas not that," said Mary de Lacy, with her cheek glowing like a rose. "I have been a very silly girl, but I will make up for it in kindness to you.
Come with me; you shall first tell me all your story, and I will give you into the hands of those who will treat you well.
You do not look like one that would do a bad act."

"Not for the world, I will answer for her, my lady," replied the minstrel, stepping forward. "I have given her my sole happiness to keep, and I am sure she will guard the treasure, and increase it, too.
But I must back to the fair, my noble lord.
There is an old faithful servant of Marian's mother, who would come with us when we ran away—she is left behind, my lord."

"No, no, she's here without," said one of De Lacy's gentlemen who had just come in. "I found her miauling like a cat after her nine kittens, and made her come into the court."

The course of studies in Pennsylvania College is as extensive and substantial as that of any institution in the country. The Preparatory Department provides for instruction in all the branches of a thorough English business education, in addition to the Elements of the Mathematics and Classical Literature. The College course is arranged in the four classes usual in the institutions of this country.

The government of the students is as energetic as their circumstances seem to require. They attend at least two recitations a day, and the Faculty contemplate increasing them to three, Church and Bible Class on the Sabbath, and are visited in their rooms so frequently as to preclude the danger of any great irregularities. It is believed no institution in the United States has more exemplary young men in connexion with it. They are all required to lodge in the College edifice, special cases excepted.

The annual expenses are—for board, tuition and room rent, during the winter session $61 87 1-2; for the summer session, $41 87 1-2; washing, $10; wood, $3 00. Total expense, $116 75. Boarding can be had in town at $1 25 per week.

There are two vacations in the year, commencing on the third Thursdays of April and September; each of five weeks continuance.

The summer session will commence on Thursday, the 22d of May. The annual commencement takes place on the third Thursday in September.

The Trustees have recently made various arrangements which will increase the efficiency of the institution. They have increased the number of Professors and provided for the most ample instruction of the students.

Professor Baugher and Haupt are prepared to board boys and to exercise a special supervision over their studies and deportment, and Parents who may prefer placing their sons under their care, will be secure in regard to their proper management, under arrangements such as pertain to the family circle.
